How It All Began

The Genesis of Distribuidora Farmacéutico Pan Americana

Our story traces back to May 1978, when the foundations of modern Latin-American pharmaceutical distribution were being written by hand, telex, and long-distance call. At that time, a young medical student in Houston, Texas—our founder, Dr. Giorgio Patino—was approached by a Latin American oncologist seeking help to obtain a critical oncology preparation that was unavailable in Mexico or Colombia.

The compound, Laetrile (Amygdalin, “Vitamin B17”), was produced in limited quantities by small laboratories in Boston, Massachusetts, primarily for export and compassionate hospital use. Though controversial and not FDA-approved, it required strict 2–8 °C cold-chain management, a rarity in the late 1970s. Acting independently, Dr. Patino coordinated the complex export process—entirely by telephone and Western Union Telex—linking Boston’s manufacturers, customs brokers in Mexico City and Bogotá, and hospital oncologists at both destinations.

The first consignment comprised twelve refrigerated vials, packed in insulated gel-ice containers and routed through Pan American World Airways from Boston (Logan Airport) to Miami, where it divided:

Six vials continued on Pan Am Flight PA-465 to Mexico City, consigned to AICM/MexImp Customs for immediate hospital release.

Six vials transferred to Aerocóndor Colombia for delivery to El Dorado Airport, Bogotá, under identical refrigerated conditions.

→ Each shipment included a Certificate of Origin, Laboratory Analysis, and a Letter of Medical Necessity, clearing customs within hours and ensuring uninterrupted cold storage—years before IATA introduced temperature-control regulations. The total operation, valued at USD 4,500 per vial, covered the product, insurance, air freight, documentation, and banking transfers executed through First City National Bank of Houston and Texas Commerce Bank (Houston) on behalf of a Mexico City hospital.

→ That single delivery, accomplished through ingenuity, precision, and trust, marked the birth of a legacy. It demonstrated that critical therapies could move safely across borders through disciplined logistics and professional coordination. The success of that 1978 mission inspired the creation of what would later formalize into Distribuidora Farmacéutico Pan Americana S.A. de C.V. — today known worldwide as PanAmFarma.

Our name itself honors Pan American World Airways, the carrier that made that first life-saving journey possible—and symbolizes our enduring commitment to linking continents through science, medicine, and care.

Fundada

En 1978 – Rx Medical Warehouse SA, se estableció como proveedor de moléculas especializadas no disponibles en México y America Latina.
